Description:

In the fall, with the sunflowers in bloom across the Midwest, Deborah Brown carried armloads of various varieties of sunflowers into the classroom for students to see, touch and sketch. The students continued to explore sunflowers by their introduction to Van Gogh in art class. There they depicted imaginary cats against a background of starry nights. Back in class they discussed where Van Gogh actually had a cat; investigation was inconclusive. Students uses their literary and artistic licenses to develop a story about Van Goghs cat, who began an adventure in his field of sunflowers, continuing his journey by leaping, exploring, stretching, and reclining while visiting other famous artists paintings and ultimately walking into Van Goghs Starry Night. Join the cat as he travels from one famous painting to another. Look closely, however! This clever feline uses the art of camouflage as he creatively assumes ownership within each artists canvas.

We read this book in my pre-school class and they loved it. I photo-copied some of the art work, cut out the cats, and laminated the art work and the cats. After reading the book at circle and talking about a few of the pictures, my class had a scavenger hunt finding the hidden cats in the classroom and then matching them to the pictures. There are 15 pictures in the book and 16 kids in my class, so once they matched the cats with the pictures, each child took a turn discussing their picture with the class. It is a lovely book with a cute theme, and my class really responded to it well.
